THE TRIBUNE.

a square fort of sods in the main street with breastworks of the country westering over the south side of Purdy's Hill to the Bronx, and easterly across the hills to Horton's Pond. When the English attacked Chatterton's Hill on the 28th they were undinashed, but during the night of the 28th and 29th of October they were raised and strengthened, being only intended for temporary use until the position above Abraham Miller's in Northcastle could be fortfield, which was done and to which the American report forwards rating?

had made the English cautious in attacking Americans behind entrenchments.

During the march of the two armies to White Plains frequent skirmishes occurred. On the 18th, the vanguard of the British army were attacked by a detachment under General Sullivan and the fight which enaued (near the road reaching from New-Rochelle) has been always represented as very creditable to the Americans. On the 21st, Colonel Rogers, a celebrated partisan officer in the French war, had accepted a command in the English service and lay at Mamaroneck. An attack upon him was planned by Lord Sterling, and executed by a force under the command of Co. Haslet of the Delaware Regiment. Rogers was completely surprised; seventy or eighty of his men were killed or made prisoners, and a considerable quantity of arms, ammunition and clothing tema (who gives us his name) informs us that several lades, including one under his protection, who were a few highs since subjected to the most raffaulty indignities by some obscene miscreant who provide around the outside of the cabin and opened that which the Hessians were routed. These provide around the outside of the cabin and opened that his is by no means a solitary case. Our correspondent thinks the chamber make ground and the outside of the cabin and opened the window blinds one after another. We are assured that his is by no means a solitary case. Our correspondent thinks the chamber make ground and the outside of the cabin and opened the window blinds unfastened, as well as the Captain is not keeping a more efficient watch. We do not publish his letter, as the subject is a disagreeably are, and we have said enough to induce badies who track hence, forth to take personal care that their window-blinds are securely fastened when they retire to rest. The inconceivably base and fishly beings who have perpetrated these outrages abould at least be very sure that they are several detected in them; for there are many hundrands and bronkers, especially Southern men, who would put a bullet through a brute so employed as readily as through a woof.
